

When we are on the road, XM radio is the only reliable source we have for urban weather and traffic. To thwart XM's ability to deliver this content to 'protect' local broadcasters would be to hamstring a very good broadcast service and would hurt the consumer most. If local stations feel they cannot compete with XM, they should turn off their transmitter, not try to shut down the competition through litigation and BS.

Constance O'Bryan, MD